

Disability-Competent Care Webinar Roundtable Series Building Partnerships Between Health Care (Plans & Providers) and Community-based Organizations

David Nolan

David Nolan is the Chief Performance Officer for Alameda Alliance for Health, responsible for assessing, monitoring and improving the overall performance of the Alliance in all phases of its work. He ensures that financial, operational and quality goals are aligned with the mission, vision and values of the Alliance. Prior to joining the Alliance, Mr. Nolan was the principal and founder of Chi Partners, a health care consulting firm focused on public policy as it relates to long-term care. He consulted to the Alliance on the Cal MediConnect Demonstration and continues to serve as the Interim Executive Director for Long Term Services and Supports. In this role, he works with community providers and aligns internal systems to prepare the Alliance for the integration of Medicare and Medi-Cal for approximately 24,000 new members. Additionally, he completed a strategic plan for long-term care integration for the City and County of San Francisco in preparation for their entry into the Duals in 2015; assisted Colorado's Department of Health Care Policy and Financing with strategic planning and led a team of health care consultants to create the Assisted Living Waiver Pilot Program for the CA Department of Health Care Services.

Yomi Wrong

Yomi Wrong manages disability access programs for the Palo Alto Medical Foundation, a Sutter Health affiliate. An experienced trainer and consultant in the fields of Independent Living and consumer-driven community based services, Yomi is also a leading voice for patient-centered care under California's Duals Demonstration pilot. From 2009 until early 2014, she served as Executive Director of the Berkeley, CA-based Center for Independent Living Inc., where she worked closely with both providers and health plans to design innovative models for delivering Long Term Services and Supports.

Christopher Duff, M. Div., has thirty years experience in the design and development of community-based rehabilitation and waiver services for adults with disabilities. He is currently Executive Director of the Disability Practice Institute, developing and advocating disability-competent practices in the delivery of health care services and supports, and promoting the dissemination of an integrated, team-based model of disability care practice. He was lead author in the development of the Disability Competent Care Assessment Tool. Most recently, he was President/CEO of AXIS Healthcare, the care management component of the Minnesota Disability Health Options and other waiver and health plan initiatives. AXIS Healthcare was a leader in the development of disability care coordination, utilizing clinical guidelines and practice standards to ensure persons with disabilities receive timely and appropriate care and support. He has been active in public policy and advocacy efforts at both the state and Federal levels. He has a Bachelors of Arts in Social Services Administration from the University of Minnesota and a Masters of Divinity from United Theological Seminary.
